He was a respected autobody repairman for over 20 years and then changed professions to a handyman until he became disabled in 2011. Monkey was known for his work ethic and put his heart into everything he did. He met his wife Cathy when they were 18 years old and they grew up together. He loved the outdoors, horseback riding, and especially riding the backroads with his daughter listening to Hank Williams Jr. In later years, he loved to kayak and just spend time floating down the river.
